SUMMARY OF REVISIONS

This revision incorporates procedures formerly published in 18th Wing Instruction 34-103. It aligns procedures and clarifies responsibilities. A “[” indicates revised material since the last edition.

1. Essential Program Elements.

1.1. Every commander has an inherent responsibility to establish and maintain organizations that embody and reflect the institutional values of the Air Force. The organization must contribute to esprit de corps and provide for the unique camaraderie shared by the men and women of the United States Air Force. Air Force clubs help commanders carry out this responsibility.

1.2. By far, clubs are the major MWR revenue generator and the economic engine for quality of life programs. With this single fund, we can take advantage of the revenue stream clubs generate and move dollars to other programs deemed important or less profitable. Because of this flexibility, club revenue may be used to support other MWR activities that provide "airmen" with an improved quality of life.

1.3. Air Force clubs are a valuable asset to the military community and cannot exist without membership. Member value pricing and an appropriate eligible non-member charge is one method of returning direct value to those individuals who choose membership in Air Force clubs.

2. How the Program is Administered and Program Limitations.

2.1. This schedule establishes minimum charges for eligible non-members and their guests. It does not apply to Air Force club members, family members, and their bona fide guests. It also does not apply to reciprocal privileges granted to Air Force club members, families, guests, and other US Armed Forces club members, their families, and guests in possession of a valid club membership card.

2.2. The following minimum amounts will be charged to those eligible non-members and their guests granted usage of the specific services and products. "Eligible non-members" are those personnel and family members who are eligible for, but have declined club membership.
